La Copa De Verlaine (Spanish Edition) Emilio Carrère

PABLO Verlaine tenía una sed fatal, una sed monstruosa y suicida, y bebía hasta la muerte. Tal vez oía la voz de una sirena fabulosa en el fondo glauco del ajenjo. El ruiseñor protervo iba al café D'Harcourt y bebía, bebía. Las cuartillas aguardaban en una carpeta, junto al tintero feo, mezquino, de fosforero de café. El rincón era un suave remanso melancólico en el triunfo de luz y de sonidos del loco Parés. A veces, con el hirrido tintero y la pluma oxidada, que manoseaba el vulgo más gorrulo, Verlaine escribía un poema de maravilla. Pocas veces podía pagar sus ajenjos. Cuando llegaban algunos admiradores, algunos amigos, el poeta, tristemente borracho, pedía dinero. Después, a la alta noche, en las tabernas de apaches y de meretrices, a la hora de la fatiga del amor callejero, Verlaine arrojaba los lises que había demandado, como una lluvia de oro, sobre la dolorida canalla. Así sus versos eran una lluvia de estrellas sobre los vulgos que aullaban y le ofendían al verle pasar borracho por su lado. En su barrio tenía una popularidad grotesca. Era un viejo loco, beodo y mal vestido, que arrojaba dinero a la chiquillería, que hacía befa de su extraña liberalidad y le tiraba piedras. Cuando murió, las comadres hicieron grandes aspavientos viendo llegar coches blasonados y fulgentes uniformes. Creían que su vecino no era sino un mendigo estafalario. Y espiritualmente no era tampoco muy bien conocido: Car elle me comprend et mon cœur transparent pour elle seule, hélas, cesse d'être un problème. Para esa desconocida, rubia o morena o roja, su corazón transparente cesó de ser un problema, para ella sola; pero ella no existió jamás. Para sus contemporáneos... a excepción de pocos nobles espíritus... fue un gran poeta que tenía un defecto, se emborrachaba y hacía una vida absurda: Derrochó sus felices dotes naturales, que hubiese podido desarrollar para bien de su obra y de su reputación, haciendo una vida más metódica
